To ease the financial burden and time stress on graduate-level applicants, Albizu University's Miami Campus has temporarily suspended the usual requirements for would-be students to pass a Graduate Records Exam (GRE) test.

"Right now, many people are looking to quickly ramp up to a new career, while juggling the demands of financial instability, working from home and home-schooling children," Albizu Miami Chancellor Dr. Tilokie DePoo explained. "Any graduate-level academic application is arduous, but easing some of those requirements is the right thing to do for our hard-working students during a difficult year."

The GRE Test is used by many graduate schools as a common measure for comparing academic candidates' qualifications.
